

My name is Bryan Bran. I currently live in Anaheim, California, and I have lived in Orange County for four (4) years.

I would describe myself as a social, shy, and funny person. I am involved in a ministry at church where I teach kids about church and God and the Bible. I also work at a healthcare company in Orange, where I provide member services to members of that company, within that health plan. I am very involved.

Right now, my biggest struggle would be waking up early. However, money also. Money is a struggle sometimes.

I love that in Orange County, everything is nearby. I enjoy the convenience of having theme parks, the beach, and the mountains close to me. If I want to get away, I just drive six (6) hours north. It's convenient to live in Orange County. Everything is close, and the food is top-of-the-line, exquisite.

In terms of a hate-free Orange County, I envision a place with equality. It's something that the United States is looking for, but it all starts in your county, your city, your local town. Just equality with color, political people, and the community. So, if we were all equal, I would say that would be hate-free.

I would advise Orange County to not drive too close. Leave 15 minutes earlier. More than anything, let's try to be equal.
